M.L.C.A. Members Go Quail Hunting

Herb Harvey, M.L.C.A. secretary, and Bill Harrington, James Jarrell, and Art Herron, all Mutli-Lakers, went quail hunting in southeast Missouri in November. They reported good hunting, bagging a total of 87 bobwhite, 40 rabbits, and eight greenhead mallards.

Herron didn't get to hunt but one day, as he had to return home due to illness. Better luck next time, Art.

Warm weather handicapped the group's duck hunting, as the ducks were still in the north.

Chabot To Preside At First 1956 Meeting, Wednesday, January 16

M. L. C. A. members reelected Ray Chabot as their president for 1957 at the December general membership meeting. He will preside at the first meeting of his new term on Wednesday, January 16.

Pistol News

By Gerry Buxton

Pistol shooting at M.L.C.A. has increased in volume this fall. We have entered competitive shooting in the Southeastern Michigan Rifle and Pistol Association. Five matches have been fired during which time we climbed from last place to third last in actual scores and seventh last on handicap.

Outdoor shooting has been planned, with 25 yard and 50 yard regulation as well as moving target type. How this can be fitted in with the Skeet and Trap, and rifle ranges, remains to be decided.

Five months ago we voluntarily began charging ourselves an additional 25c on range fees and 10c extra on 22 cal ammo. We loaned ourselves enough money to buy wholesale quantities of 38 cal, reloaded ammo. We sell this ammo at 40c profit per pack of 50.

Total profits accumulated from these excess charges have repaid the original loan, and paid for stock on hand worth $50.00. An additional $25.00 cash balance is the beginning of a fund to procure 45 reload ammo. The 45 ammo will then be sold at a suitable profit.

The ultimate profit goal is to purchase a smoke elimination installation. This is sorely need-

At some still later time, when money is available, we intend to install some form of target carrier

The range house interior and its equipment give an uncared for appearance entirely out of keeping with the excellent exterior. This is due partially to a lack of suitable storage facilities

Painting, cleaning, cabinet building and other maintenance work will require some money and some work.

We would like to propose that a schedule be prepared whereby all range house users share in the expense and work to complete and maintain the interior.

If it should happen that some of the groups concerned feel that our proposed investment is not warranted, we will continue with our improvement program though it will necessarily be rather slow.

Pheasants See Capitol

Two cock pheasants were seen in downtown Lansing early this week, about 200 yards from the front steps of the state Capitol.

Victor S. Janson, who coincidentally took charge of the Conservation Department's pheasant research program on the following day, reported seeing the two wild birds, thoroughly surrounded by concrete and civilization.

The nearest, and only, grass within shotgun distance was the Capitol lawn and the birds were obviously not headed that direction. One flew up and perched on the Hotel Wentworth's marquee sign, the other sailed around the corner toward the Grand River, 50 feet from the hotel

Thus; --It Happens

Some hunters seem to be asking for a hunting accident, according to a news release from the Pennsylvania Game Commission

While investigating a hunting accident, a Pennsylvania game officer learned of a nother might-have-been casualty.

He says, "A sportsman told me he was hunting squirrels on opening day when he spied a furry object moving back and forth on the far side of a tree. The hunter was tempted to shoot, but held his fire because the motion was unusual. As it turned out, a man dressed in dark clothing and wearing a Davey Crockett hat was hiding behind the tree, watching for squirrel."

Hunters Bag Some 70,000 Deer This Season

Michigan hunters bagged some 70,000 deer during regular and special firearm seasons in northern areas of the state this year, according to statistical estimates by Conservation Department game specialists.

In the upper and northern lower peninsulas, an estimated 58,300 deer were taken by hunters during the reguar season and another 12,000 whitetails were bagged during special seasons

In comparison with past year, the regular season buck kill was 18 percent below the 71,000 taken last year—but two percent above the 1954 buck kill. Department field personnel reported a general decrease in the number of hunters afield this year.

The largest regular season drop was recorded in the upper peninsula where hunters took an estimated 21,200 buck this year—more than 27 percent below the 29,160 bagged last fall Another 750 whitetails were taken this year in the first "any deer" season held in the U.P. in more than 30 years.

The northern lower peninsula tag this year—37.100 bucks—was about 11 percent below the 1955 total of 41.930, but also was 11 percent above the buck kill for the region in 1954.

The decline in the buck kill this year—anticipated by Department game biologists—undoubtedly was affected by food shortages last winter when more than 36,000 deer died of starvation. At least 15,000 of these starvation victims were buck fawns and could have been legal bucks this fall, if they had lived.

Other results of the critical situation last winter were apparent to game biologists who examined thousands of deer bagged this fall. The physical condition of northern deer generally was poorer than in the 1955 scason.

Biologists found a decline in antler development, both in number of points and beam diameter, in 112-year-old bucks. Comparison of deer weights with the special season of 1952 showed that fawns taken this year in the Lake - Newaygo county area averaged almost 12 pounds less than those taken in 1952. This could indicate a threatening future for this year's fawn crop in food shortage areas because feeding experiments show that five pounds may mean the difference between life and death for fawns under critical winter conditions.

Ninety-Day Limit Set

The coming of home and public deep freeze food storage plants in recent years has made an old game law increasingly important to Michigan's sportsmen.

The law declares that game birds and animals may be kept 60 days after the close of the respective hunting season. But if a sportsman wants to keep the legal game meat longer than that, he can request and obtain a permit from any conservation officer.

Ducks, geese and other migratory waterfowl are covered by a federal law that allows a hunter to keep the birds 90 days.

Season Is Still Open On Rabbits, Bobcats

With the close of deer season, many hunters have turned their attention to other game cottontail rabbits, snowshoe hares and bobcats.

Cottontails, primarily a southern Michigan game animal, are legal targets in the southern lower peninsula through January 31, while rabbits and hares may be hunted in the northern lower peninsula and the U.P. through March 1.

The northern lower peninsula's bobcat season will be in effect through March 15. Last year, hunters took about 140 'cats in the state's first bobcat season. In the upper peninsula, bobcats still have a predator status and may be taken at any time of year; 754 were bountied in the U.P. in 1955.

Illegal removal of trees from state-owned land can turn out to be a very costly activity, according to recent trespass cases tried in justice courts.

State law prohibits the removal of forest products, minerals, buildings, or other property from state land without lawful authority. A person who wilfully commits this type of trespass can be ordered to pay the state three times the amount of damage, in addition to the regular fine, jail sentence and court costs assessed by the courts

Recent cases of voluntary trespass at Gratiot - Saginaw state game area illustrate how expensive these penalties can be.

One man, convicted of removing 39 small white pine and white spruce trees from the game area, was ordered to pay $83.30 in fines and court costs and serve 45 days in jail—and the violator must pay the state $117 in damages, three times the value of the trees.

Another man unlawfully removed a seven-foot white spruce from the game area and was assessed a $25 fine, $5.40 in court costs, and must pay $21 to the state in triple damages.

These trees were planted at the Gratiot-Saginaw area under the Conservation Department's game habitat improvement program and loss of trees means loss of valuable cover for wildlife.

Under provisions of the state law regarding removal of property from public land, a person causing wilful damages not exceeding $200 is guilty of a misdemeanor and can receive a maximum penalty of a $100 fine and 90 days in jail, plus court costs and payment of three times the amount of damage.

If damages exceed $200, the crime is considered a felony and can be punished by a $100-$500 fine, two years in jail, court costs and triple damages.

of hunting to get each deer.

Other information gained from these controlled hunts at Cusino emphasizes the tremendous reproductive capacity of deer. Each year, about one-third of the deer are taken from the enclosure, but fawn production brings the herd back to its original level. In contrast, hunters take only 10-12 percent of the state's deer herd each year during regular hunting seasons.

From three to nine Department hunters took part each day in the Cusino hunt. The 10 deer taken were turned over to public schools for use in hot lunch programs.

Hunters found that deer drives were the most effective means of hunting. Less productive methods used were still hunting or stalking, trailing and sitting.

Uses Muzzle-Loader To Score Neck Shot

The December 1-2 special deer hunting season was really "special" for F. W. Terwilliger, Conservation Department geologist. Terwilliger, an enthusiast of muzzle-loading guns, bagged his deer with a 90-year-old firearm.

He was bunting in Area 4, near Gladwin, Saturday, Dec. 1, when he sighted a doc and a fawn about 40 yards away. Terwilliger dropped the doc with a neck shot.

It was the first deer he has bagged with the muzzle-loader, which was manufactured in the 1860's.

Fifteen Days Plus Five Bucks Equal No Kill

If a man hunted all day for 15 days, in a mile-square enclosure containing five bucks, it seems that he couldn't miss bagging a deer.

Well, he didn't get his buck. The "man" involved here is a product of statistics, but the deer and the situation are genuine. Conclusions are based on the annual controlled hunt at the Conservation Department's Cusino wildify experiment station in the upper peninsula.

In order to bag one of the five bucks in the Cusino enclosure. Department hunters had to spend about 108 man-hours of hunting—more than 15 full days of hunting for one man.

The controlled hunt is designed to remove surplus deer and to provide further information on the effect of a certain hunting pressure on a known number of deer. In total, it took 243 man-hours of hunting to bag two bucks, five does and three fawns from the herd of 29 deer in the mile-square area.

The hunt was set up with a two-day "bucks only" season and a four-day "any deer" season. Nine of the deer, including one buck, were bagged in the four-day section. During this "any deer" hunt, it took an average of about 15 man-hours

Draws Heavy Penalty For Illegal Trapping

An upper peninsula resident, recently convicted of violation of state trapping laws, received an unusual penalty in a Manistique justice court. The violator, arrested by conservation officer Harold R. Peters of Seney, was required to reimburse the state for the value of the wildlife illegally taken.

Peters apprehended the defendant in Schoolcraft county with three mink pelts and five muskrat skins before the opening of trapping season.

After the violator pleaded guilty, Justice Edward J. Doyle asked Peters' opinion on the value of the furs. The officer estimated the total value at $50. Justice Doyle then ordered the violator to pay the amount of restitution, plus a $10 fine and $7.50 in court costs.

Will Count Dead Deer

A systematic count of dead deer left in the woods by hunters will not be conducted until spring, unless unusual weather conditions make the search possible before then.

The count was to be held in two areas December 3-5, but had to be postponed because heavy snow made an accurate check impossible. The two sections are Area 2, the Lake-Newaygo county area; and Area 3, which includes parts of Clare. Gladwin, Missaukee and Roscommon counties.

They're Yours; Use Them!

Ice fishing activity is getting under way in many of Michigan's state parks.

Angiers often forget that many state park waters are fishable and get extensive use during winter months.

Most park managers report that ice is not yet available or strong enough to support fishermen and their shanties, but this picture is expected to change in many parks within the next few weeks.

Parks also are used in winter for hiking, skiing, hunting and other general outdoor activities.

Lists Faults of Hunters During Deer Season

At least 20 hunters were lost and required assistance in returning to civilization during the firearm deer season.

This high figure emphasizes again that many hunters fail to adjust their thinking to wilderness conditions when they stump out of cars, camps and cabins in search of deer.

One fault committed by many of these lost hunters is to walk one direction for three hours, then expect to return in the half hour that remains until darkness.

Another is to carry a compass, but not to use it until well into the forest and completely turned around.

A third is to hunt alone, or to be unfamiliar with the country or to avoid, as far as possible, looking at maps when in a new area.

But panic is perhaps the most dangerous enemy a lost hunter must face. There are cases on record of lost hunters who ran themselves into the ground, possessed solely by fear.

Michigan woodlands can be Gangerous when any of these faults is committed.

But the hunter who carries matches and tinder, a knife and compass, and a map or knowledge of the country; and knows how to use all these items can walk out of the most difficult situations.

It is not a lack of woodmanship that gets hunters lost: it's a lack of pre-planning and forgetting common sense.

Limits Ice Fishing from Houghton Lake

Ice fishermen are allowed to take unlimited numbers of perch from Houghton Lake this winter, following action taken by the Conservation Commission at its December 13-14 meeting in Lansing, Formerly, the limit was 25 per day.

The Commission ordered the experimental ice fishing regulations in an attempt to solve the problem of stunted perch in Houghton Lake.

The lifting of the perch creel limit for ice fishermen was recommended by Conservation Department fisheries workers after recent studies indicated a tremendous number of perchabout four inches long in the lake.

The abundance of perch also may be a factor in the declining northern pike population in the lake, due to predation. However, continuous "development" around the lake has pinched off pike spawning areas and probably is the major factor in the northern pike decrease.

Several conferences have been held during the past two months with bait dealers, sporting goods dealers and resort owners who are concerned about the stunted perch problem. Department fish workers feel that partial chemical treatment may become a useful management tool for the lake, but agreed to the more immediate plan of lifting the perch creel limit on an experimental basis this winter.

Hungry Deer Raid Crop

Area 2, a seven-county unit centering Baldwin, was designated for special "any deer" hunting this fall because deer over-browse their natural food range in the area and sometimes feed on farm crops, causing damage. Reports from residents indicate the area's deer problem isn't solved yet.

A farmer near Luther recently requested a special permit from the Conservation Department to shoot deer damaging his crops. He reported some 20-30 whitetails digging up his wheat field.

Annual Hunting Activity is Being Surveyed

Some 16,000 Michigan hunters are being asked to supply deer hunting information in the Conservation Department's annual post card survey of hunting activity and success.

Questionnaires designed to gather information on the 1956 special seasons were mailed to more than 6000 deer hunters in early December. About two-thirds of the post card replies from this mailing had been received by the Department by December 28. Reminder cards.

urging prompt replies, were mailed to hunters who had not answered.

Another 10,000 questionnaires will be sent out during the next few weeks to a different group of hunters, seeking information on the regular deer season.

In this survey, a statistically-based cross-section of hunters are asked about their hunting success - or lack of it — and hunting activity. Data obtained in the survey provides a close estimate of the total kill, hunting distribution and other basic information used in establishing hunting regulations and in other aspects of deer herd management.

Under the present system, every 40th hunter on license lists is contacted in the regular season survey. The high rate of cooperation among hunters — as many as 96 percent respond—aids in the poll's accuracy.

Results of the poll won't be known until early spring, after all replies are received and processed.

Camp Seekers Turned Away at State Parks

Some late and lamentable figures indicate more than seven percent of all persons seeking camping privileges in state parks had to be turned away last year because of overcrowded campgrounds.

Conservation Department summaries show 7241 camps were turned away. A camp represents four or five persons each, making a total of 30,000-36,000 persons that were refused entrance last year.

"This has become a very unfortunate situation," said Arthur C. Elmer, chief of the Department's parks division 'State parks are open to all the people. We are very disappointed when we have to turn campers away because of a lack of facilities.

Elmer said 20 parks out of 57 that allow camping had to turn away those seeking overnight privileges; most of these parks are in the northern lower pen-
